From the roof of their home, 204

East Twenty-first street, they sent up the kite, hanging from whose frame were Japanese lanterns. These were the side lights described by spectators who saw the kite over the Metropolitant twee.

The whirr of the motor, described by some of the spectators, must have been the chugging of a nearby taxicab.

The kite broke away last night with 500 yards of twine attached, after it had again aroused intense interest in the vicinity of Madison Square, drawing a big crowd.
